Bridge Closure Postponed By Fiscal Court

County Attorney Says Liability Issues Persist

By Wes Feese
Editor

The Adair County Fiscal Court and Judge-Executive Ann Melton met for their regular monthly meeting Tuesday night, and a sizable chunk of the discussion centered on the proposed closure of L. Hancock Bridge.

The issue dates back to February, when state District Bridge Engineer Jason Coe sent Melton a letter explaining that the bridge does not meet the requirements for inclusion in the National Bridge Inventory. Coe went on to state that if the bridge were a part of NBI, he would propose a three-ton weight limit posting with weekly monitoring, and "upon finding any additional scour, flooding conditions or settlement of the concrete that would indicate the structure is near failing or washing out; I would recommend closing the ford to all traffic."

Coe also offered a cost estimate for replacing the bridge, which was just more than $150,000.

Magistrate Billy Rowe, who represents District 7, where the bridge is located, explained to Melton and his fellow magistrates that he and state Rep. Bam Carney had worked together to come

City Council Hears Fireworks Complaint

By Wes Feese
Editor

The past few weeks have featured some rather loud and late nights in Adair County, as 4th of July festivities spilled into late June and continued into July's second week. Small-scale fireworks shows have been prevalent in seemingly every neighborhood and community for almost two weeks, and one local resident told the Columbia City Council Monday night that a small but greatly respected segment of the population is subjected to undue and undeserved stress because of the noise.

"The problem is, some of us that have served, me included, suffer from [post-traumatic stress disorder]," Iraq War veteran Scott Tarter told the council, but noted he wasn't complaining about 4th of July celebrations. "The problem is people shooting off fireworks the week before and the week after."

Tarter said that he and others that suffer from PTSD have to shut their doors and windows, turn up the television, and do all they can to avoid the stress-inducing noise. He said that he can make due if it's only one or two nights a year, but that the continuous commotion is almost unbearable when it goes on for nights on end.

Tarter asked if anything could be done to curtail the problem, and was flexible in his request.

"Just as long as it isn't every night, for two or three weeks," Tarter said.

Mayor Mark Harris said that he's fielded several calls complaining about the fireworks, and promised to look into the matter further for a solution, particularly by investigating neighboring towns'ordinances about fireworks.

Several councilors offered thanks to Tarter, both for his service and for bringing this problem to their attention.

In other business at Monday's regular monthly meeting:

•The council gave first reading to an ordinance establishing a joint city-county human rights commission in Columbia and Adair County.

The commission will handle issues relating to discrimination by race, age, religion, physical handicap, and national origin. It aims to "promote equal opportunity for all," as the ordinance states.

•The council heard from Ellen Zornes about a $5,200 grant recently obtained to put benches along the Public Square downtown. The money will buy nine new benches, bought locally from Fabco, and Zornes asked the council for

The Adair County Fair kicked off in full force Monday night after limited activities Friday and Saturday, and features a new carnival this year--Dixieland Carnival--based out of Alabama.

Fair Debuts With New Carnival

By Wes Feese

The 2014 edition of Adair County's longest-running mid-summer staple has a new look this year, as Dixieland Carnival replaced Myers Midway, and according to Adair County Fair organizers, the feedback so far as been almost universally positive.

"We've had many compliments at the front gate already," Fair Board president Greg Thomas says. "It's more spread out, it's laid out differently, and it offers something for all ages."

Notably different this year is the abundance of rides for small children, as there are at least 10 rides that are suitable for toddlers.

"Parents with small children will not be disappointed," Thomas says. "If a child is big enough to get out of his or her stroller, they're big enough for several of our rides. We also have plenty of rides for more mature kids, and there are

Saturday Wreck Sends Three To ER

By Blake Spires
Asst. Editor

A two-vehicle accident that occurred on Russell Road Saturday afternoon sent three individuals to Westlake Regional Hospital for treatment of minor injuries.

The accident occurred when 28-year-old Bradley Powell of Columbia attempted to turn his 1994 Toyota Corolla into a private driveway, failing to see the 2001 Hyundai being operated by Sheana Passmore, which then struck the front-end of Powell's vehicle, knocking it off of Russell Road about six miles from Columbia.

"When I arrived on the scene, there was one car sitting off the side of the road, and one was still in one lane," says Adair County Sheriff's Deputy B.J. Bray, who worked the accident. "It appears that Powell failed to see her when he was trying to turn. She saw him turning and tried to veer into

KET Senior Director Addresses Chamber

By Blake Spires
Asst. Editor

The regularly scheduled July meeting of the Columbia-Adair County Chamber of Commerce took on a statewide scope this month, as Julie Schmidt, the Senior Director of External Affairs of Kentucky Educational Television addressed the Chamber Tuesday afternoon at Lindsey Wilson College's Cranmer Dining Center.

"My inner nerd is really excited about our guest today," joked Chamber President Brandon Thompson. "I've loved KET since I was a kid. Growing up in a small town, you don't always get to go a lot of places, but with KET you could always see things from all over."

Sheri McIver of WAIN, July's corporate sponsor, introduced Ms. Schmidt, who began her informative presentation by focusing on who KET is designed to serve.

"We're all about the people of this state," Schmidt said. "It's truly an honor to serve you, because that's what we've always been about."

Schmidt continued, touching on each of the areas in which KET seeks to fulfill its overall goal of increased education of the people of the Commonwealth.

"We are Kentucky's largest classroom," she stated. "We're in 100-percent of the public school districts, and we provide age-appropriate educational content for all ages. Our core mission has always remained solid, and that is to further the education of everyone in Kentucky."

Schmidt discussed the pre-public school education provided by famed television programs like Sesame Street, Reading Rainbow and Mister Rogers' Neighborhood throughout KET's history by their continued partnership with PBS, and also highlighted the numerous avenues made available by the organization

The Weekly WORD

Editorial Commentary
Written By
Wes Feese, EDITOR

Fair week is always one of the busiest of the year here at The Adair Progress, and the 2014 edition has been no different, as there have been events and programs to cover seemingly all day, every day.

I've enjoyed it so far though. My third fair working for the paper has been a little easier than the first two, probably because I know what I'm doing for the most part now whereas the past two I've had to figure it out mostly as I go. As I was strolling around the carnival Monday night taking pictures and waiting for the small car demolition derby to start, I started thinking about how much I loved the fair when I was a kid, and I'm sure many readers share similar memories.

It was always a huge treat to get to go, and I probably averaged about two visits per year during my childhood—one night, and Kids' Day. Sometimes I would luck into getting invited to go with a friend, but otherwise one or two trips would be the maximum, and I always made the most of it.

Throughout the six or seven year span I'm speaking of, a few recollections stand out above the haze of faded memories—one ride, one demolition derby, and one monster truck show.

Rides were always the best part of the fair. They were the only reason I wanted to go, and I spent 90-percent of my time either waiting in line or riding rides. One year, when I was probably 8 or 9, I decided I was mature enough (and finally tall enough) for the real rides—the rides I had seen people get off and immediately vomit. Finally being able to experience that mysterious feeling of moving in ways that could very well make me sick was a huge lifetime milestone in my elementary-school-age mind.

The first of these rides that I tried was something called the Gravitron. It was a big enclosed cylinder, with pads on the walls that tilted back slightly, so when I entered and was told to lean against the wall, my feet were probably six or eight inches in front of my head and upper body. The cylinder started spinning, slowly at first, but quickly accelerated to speeds that I had previously assumed weren't even possible. Then the pads lifted, about a foot, and somehow I stayed glued to the pad, suspended in air, both feet off the ground. It was amazing. I didn't even care that I was hit in the face by what I thought at the time was probably a piece of gum but, looking back, was probably just fast-moving spit from one of the folks on the ride with me.

In retrospect, it had to have been incredibly dangerous, because there were no straps or harnesses, just gravity, or centripetal force, or whatever the proper science term is, holding me to the wall. I wouldn't do it again for anything in the world, but at the time it was probably the biggest thrill of my life. Yeah, I had a rather uneventful childhood.

The other two memories that stand out were on the rare occasions that one of the main-track events caught my attention. The first was a monster truck show, and like all 5-year-old boys, I thought monster trucks were the coolest thing in the world. I sat patiently while a bunch of old beat up car carcasses were lined up on the track, and then watched the "warm up" show, bored to tears. Sure, a pickup truck jumped a couple of cars with the assistance of a ramp, but it was a regular-sized truck, so I had no interest. Then, finally, a big, creeping behemoth with tires taller than me came plowing through. One trip over the cars, two trips over the cars, three trips over the cars, and it was done. It probably didn't last 10 minutes, and I didn't care. I loved every minute of it, finally being able to see a real monster truck in action.

The last fair memory that stands out was my first demolition derby. I wasn't interested at first, but for some reason I was sitting there in the stands when it started.

"Look," I said to my mom, "that car is all beat up and wrecked." I thought it was hilarious.

"They're all like that," Mom said. "They crash into each other."

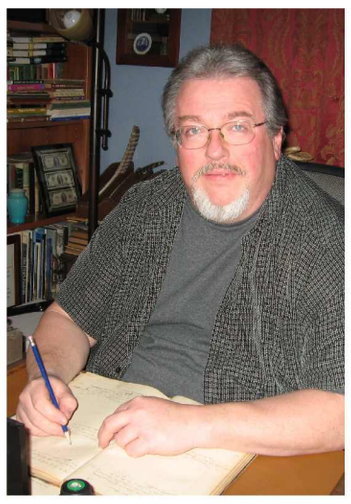

I didn't even believe her, so I had to stay and watch. It made no sense to me, but I loved it. I never really got that the object was to keep your car running longer than the others, but I'd never seen a car crash, and I got to see several that night. I couldn't believe it was legal. A car-wreck show, what kid wouldn't love that?

Now I'm older and haven't been on a ride in years. I haven't thought about monster trucks lately either, until writing this column at least. I still like the derbies though, and watching Monday's small-car event, even with only five cars, made me feel like a kid again, and that's pretty much the fair's appeal for adults. It's something that doesn't really change with the times, other than a few cosmetic differences.

There's still three nights left, so if you haven't yet, come out these next few nights and relive part of your childhood.

An Old Tragedy Recalled

An Old Tragedy Recalled

Cane Valley, Sept 26th

"Having read in the News, some time ago, of a tragedy that occurred in Neatsville, Adair County, in the fifties, written by my old friend W.F. Neat, all of which I remember very well, I recall another tragedy that occurred in Adair County, in a mile and a half of Columbia, many years ago. The old house in which the event occurred still stands on one of the banks of Russell's Creek to remind the old passer of the crime perpetrated in that house.

"In 1841, Jacob Burk and his two little sons, aged 10 and 12, lived in the house mentioned; the three comprising his family, his wife having died several years previous to the crime I am relating. Not being posted with all the details connected with the deed, I had to rely upon older men than myself for information. Uncle Perry Hancock, an old and one of the best citizens of the county, and a man of sound judgment and solid information, informs me that Burk was a son-in-law of William Henry Harrison, not the President, but the same name, and he claimed to be related to President Harrison.

"He was a candidate several times in Adair County for the Legislature and in one raced he was beaten (by) only one vote. Frank Montgomery, Sr., beat him that vote.

"But to return to the tragedy: Uncle Perry Hancock informs me that perhaps on more than one occasion Burk told him that no one should ever control his two little boys, but no one thought at the time he meant murder; but time passed on and the father and two sons seemed to be living together tranquilly. Little did the two innocent boys think when they went to bed that fatal night that it was their last night upon earth.

"The next day, Oliver Hancock, a brother of Uncle Perry's, was passing by the house, and not seeing any of the family, he went to the stable and there he found the Senior Burk hanging by the neck dead. Whilst he was gazing upon the body, Judge Zach Wheat rode up. They remained awhile, then went to the house to hunt for the little boys, but found the doors locked. By this time it was nearly dark and the search for the boys was abandoned until next morning. Several parties gathered next morning and forced their way into the house, and on the bed the boys were lying, spooned, with their heads cut off. However, there was a small piece of skin hanging between the neck and head of one of the boys. A bloody axe was near the door and a sharp shoe knife was lying on the table in the room, and a part of the bed corn[?] cut off; showing where Burk got the rope with which he hung himself.

"Thus ended a triple murder that was perpetrated sixty-one years ago, which but few people now living in Adair County remember. [signed] P.H. Bridgewater." [Adair County News, 1 October 1902]

Mr. Edwards Killed...

"John Mullins, charged with the murder of an old man named Edwards, in Adair County, ten years since (therefore, circa 1862), was recently sentenced to five years in the penitentiary for manslaughter. After the killing he escaped to Missouri, but was captured and brought to Adair County for trial." [The Interior Journal, Stanford, Lincoln County, KY, 7 March 1873, p2]

FROM THE DESK OF
ATTORNEY GENERAL JACK CONWAY

In June, I joined Governor Steve Beshear in announcing a crucial settlement that restores certainty to Kentucky's annual payments from the tobacco Master Settlement Agreement (MSA), providing essential funding to our farmers, childhood development programs, and public health initiatives for the foreseeable future.

Kentucky joined the historic MSA in 1998 with the country's four largest tobacco manufacturers, and many other smaller tobacco companies subsequently agreed to sign on. The tobacco companies entered into the MSA with states and their attorneys general to repay hundreds of millions of dollars that the states had spent in the past to pay for the smoking-related illnesses of their citizens. It was the result of the largest class action lawsuit in the history of the United States. The MSA also placed certain restrictions on the way tobacco products could be advertised and branded, specifically to children. Gone are the images of Joe Camel, the Virginia Slims Tennis Tournament, and the Winston Cup.

Each year, the companies make payments to the states, and in turn, the states have the duty to enforce the terms of the MSA agreement by policing non-participating manufacturers ñ the tobacco companies operating outside of the MSA framework. More than a decade ago, the participating tobacco companies decided to challenge each state's enforcement efforts, and since that time, there has been a complex legal battle between the tobacco companies and the states over portions of the payments.

An arbitration panel ruled last year that Kentucky did not diligently enforce the MSA in 2003, during a previous governor and attorney general's terms. This arbitration decision resulted in a reduction to the MSA payment for 2014. While I disagree with that ruling, continuing to litigate this decade-long issue would have put the Commonwealth in grave danger of losing half of our $100 million payment for this year, and it would have left our payments in limbo for years to come, costing Kentucky millions of dollars in litigation fees with no resolution in sight. This wasn't going to work for Kentucky.

That's why I reached out to the tobacco companies to determine how we could get the train back on the tracks and work together to end the litigation and find an agreement that was suitable for all parties. The result is an agreement that fully restores Kentucky's MSA payment for 2014 and will result in a net gain of $57.2 million for Kentucky.

To date, Kentucky has invested more than $400 million of MSA funds to increase farm income, diversify crops, and create business opportunities for farmers. We have also funded early child development programs and devoted a significant portion of this fund to public health initiatives, including anti-smoking campaigns and cancer research. This settlement ends a long-running dispute, and it will allow our Commonwealth to continue supporting these imperative programs and services.

The settlement is one Kentucky can be proud of. This is great news for our farmers, communities, and health advocates, and the settlement will continue to have a positive impact on the Commonwealth. These funds are critical to Kentucky, and we can't afford to lose them. I appreciate Governor Beshear and his staff working diligently with my staff to hammer out a settlement that is good for Kentucky and will ensure our tobacco payments for decades to come.

$10 GED® Testing Available For A Limited Time In Kentucky

Adair County Adult Education encourages adults to take advantage of this opportunity

Kentucky Adult Education (KYAE) has announced that, beginning July 7, 2014, eligible adults may take each module of the GED® test at the reduced rate of $10, as a result of $20 vouchers being provided to eligible individuals.

With the use of these limited-time vouchers, the cost of a full GED® test will be only $40. The regular cost of the full battery of GED® testing modules is $120, so this represents an $80 savings to test takers.

"We are really excited for the opportunity for eligible adults to take each GED® test module for just $10," said LeAnna Bennett, Assistant Program Director, Adair County Adult Education. "We encourage everyone to spread the word about this promotion. It will only last as long as vouchers are available from KYAE, so people need to come in as soon as possible."

The current version of the GED® test was launched by the GED Testing Service in January 2014. The test, which is computer-based, consists of four modules: Reasoning Through Language Arts, Mathematical Reasoning, Science and Social Studies. This test allows for individual content modules to be taken one at time. According to Bennett, approximately 2506 adult residents of Adair County lack high school credentials.

"We know that passing the GED® test opens doors to the future by helping adults prepare for college and job training and to get better jobs," said Bennett. "We want as many of our eligible residents to take advantage of this opportunity as possible."

Adair County Adult Education offers free classes to help adults earn their GED® diploma. The Adair County adult education center is located at 108 Lindsey Wilson Street. The program can be reached by calling 270-384-7475, or by e-mailing leanna.bennett@kctcs.edu.

suggestions on placement, and also offered her own ideas.

"We were thinking, have three or four of them in the fountain area," Zornes said. "We were also thinking about the flower box areas."

Zornes also offered the suggestion of having the benches' backs to the square, facing local businesses, but the council wasn't quite as accepting of that particular idea.

"If you have benches facing the square, we might get some whittlers back," Dr. Ronald Rogers opined, harkening back to the days when old men sat outside the courthouse trimming sticks of wood with their pocketknives.

Zornes reiterated that the location of the benches was flexible, and ultimately left the decision up to the council. Harris nominated Councilor Charles Grimsley to assess the area for bench-placement needs.

Councilor June Parson also raised the issue of liability in case the benches were placed in an area that could potentially cause injury or danger, and Grimsley will have to consider those matters as well before he brings his recommendation back to the council.

•The council passed a resolution of support for the Trail Town Initiative, which hopes to bring tourists and businesses to the area by taking advantage of Adair County's many streams, trails, and scenic roads.

The measure was largely ceremonial, as it does not bind the city financially but only stands as an official statement of support.

All councilors were present for the meeting with the exception of Linda Waggener.

The Adair County Ambulance Service arrived on the scene at the same time as Deputy Bray, and immediately began treating Powell, Passmore, and a passenger in her vehicle for injuries. Passmore and her passenger were transported to Westlake ER for further treatment, while a bystander alerted Bray of smoke coming from Powell's Corolla.

"There were hay fields on the side of the road, and with the wind blowing we wanted to make sure we avoided a vehicle and grass fire, so we called in the [Columbia-Adair County] Fire Department," Bray explained. "We went to work trying to disconnect the battery, and when they arrived the smoke had stopped."

Powell was then taken to Westlake ER by private vehicle, where he was treated andreleased soon thereafter.

"We reach 5.5 million people through our television broadcasts," Schmidt continued. "But we also offer more than 1,600 digital classroom resources such as electronic field trips, virtual libraries and online courses."

up with funds to rebuild the bridge, but the process came to a halt when a nearby landowner refused to allow engineers to conduct soil tests on his land.

Several county residents that use the bridge frequently attended the meeting, and all spoke out in favor of keeping the bridge open. They said that the bridge is a necessity, their tax dollars paid for it, and that they cross it on tractors and pulling farm equipment daily, doubting the structural damage that Coe had implied in his letter to Melton.

There was even discussion about tearing out the bridge and just leaving a low water crossing for vehicles, but the same problem persists, because the bridge can't be torn down without soil samples and equipment, which the neighboring landowner will not allow on his property.

The prospect of keeping the bridge open, in its current state, led County Attorney Jennifer Hutchison-Corbin to explain that since the state Transportation Cabinet sent the letter, the county could be liable in case of an accident.

Mutlitple magistrates brought up the prospect of installing a three-ton weight limit, possibly with a cross-at-your-own-risk warning, but each time Corbin asserted that the measure wouldn't lift any possible liability from the county.

"I don't think just putting up a sign would limit that liability, if something does happen," Corbin stated.

With no other viable options present at the time, the magistrates continued to search for possible solutions, not wanting to have to close the bridge.

"We have got to keep that road open," Rowe said, "one way or another."

"We could put this off for 30 days," Melton suggested, although Corbin again asserted that liability issues would persist until the matter was resolved.

Eventually, when the discussion reached a standstill, magistrate Perry Reeder made a motion to postpone the closure until next month, in which time other possible solutions will be explored, although no suggestions, other than the three-ton weight limit, were suggested. Melton also said that she'd seek a second opinion from a different engineer.

In other business at Tuesday night's meeting:

•Approved an ordinance for a joint city-county human rights commission, which will consist of seven members—two appointed by the city, and five appointed by the county. Magistrate Sammy Baker asked that the community nominate individuals to serve on the newly-formed board.

•Restored funding to the Columbia-Adair County Airport Board. $4,000 will be given for airport support, and an additional $3,000 for debt service.

•Approve electrical inspection rates for the new fiscal year. The rates are the same as last year's.

rides that parents can ride with their child."

The new layout for the carnival gives a more spacious feel, and Thomas says that the new configuration, coupled with Dixieland's dedication to cleanliness, has made this carnival the best he's seen in his years working at the fair.

"It is definitely one of the best carnivals we've ever had in Adair County," Thomas says. "Since I've been around, I think it is the best."

It's common knowledge in this community that fair week almost always guarantees rain, but through the opening days, weather has been mostly clear and organizers are hoping that trend continues, as this year's program is off to a promising start.

"Thankfully, all we've had so far is just a few sprinkles," Thomas says. "So we've been happy with the weather. It looks like we're going to have a cold front coming through so that should help with the heat at night."

With weather a non-issue so far, Thomas says that the fair's opening nights have been a rousing success by any measure.

"We're running about par for the course as far as attendance goes—it's just about normal compared to years past," Thomas says. "Our entries into events are actually up a little, but it's hard to compare because there are so many different factors—weather, scheduling, that kind of thing. Anything you do, you'll have better nights and weaker nights."

The big draw thus far has been the pageants. While the grandstands at the main track have been largely empty so far, the pavilion where the pageants take place has been packed every night, helping bolster attendance Monday night as more than 1,600 people showed up, at least half of whom attended the pageants.

"That's up from about 1,300 on Monday night of last year," Thomas says. "That's one reason we have the pageants during the fair—they're known statewide and we do as much as we can to make those programs appealing."

The attendance boost from pageants was much needed, as the small car demolition derby Monday night proved entertaining but short, with few attendees in the stands and only five cars in the competition.

Looking forward, Thomas says he expects the fair's final three nights to all be big draws, but admits that Saturday night is expected to be especially huge.

"We've got the big car derby, the $10,000 giveaway, and several other local organizations and businesses are doing giveaways and raffles that night as well," Thomas says. "We've had 5,000 attendees on Saturday night before, and we'd love to have that many or more this year."

Thomas attributes this year's success to the work of many volunteers that have sacrificed their own time and money to make the fair one the community can be proud of.

"There's a great group of volunteers that put the fair on," Thomas says. "They do this for the people in this community, and without them, the fair couldn't go on."

In closing, Thomas encourages people to come out for the fair's final three nights and enjoy the entertainment.

"We have something for everyone," Thomas says. "As of now, we've got a good run going, and if the weather holds, this should be a record fair as far as participation and number of attendees."

1959, it has been considered one of the great American musicals.

This is the first time Brock, who has been involved in professional theater for three decades, has produced The Sound of Music.

"It's a story that a lot of people have seen as a film, but not everyone is familiar with the stage production, which is slightly different from the film that was produced in 1965," Brock said. "I wanted to produce this show because it's not just a wonderful story, but also because it's a story that so many people can relate to on so many levels."

The TheatreFest! production stars Columbia residents Eric Peterson and Maggie Coleman. Peterson plays Capt. Georg von Trapp, who is torn between duty to his native Austria and his conscience. Coleman plays postulant Maria Rainer, who is torn between her vocation as a nun and an unexpected love for von Trapp. Elise Keiffer of Burkesville, Ky., plays von Trapp's love interest, Elsa Schraeder, and Brent Thompson of Columbia plays the Max Detweiler, a music promoter who tries to negotiate a changing Austrian society on the eve of World War II.

The Sound of Music will be performed at 7 p.m. CT July 11-12, 16-18 in V.P. Henry Auditorium, 210 Lindsey Wilson Street. For more information, contact Robert Brock at or 270-590-4803.

Jaycee Thomas Reed led a large group of children of various ages through a rousing game of Simon Says Friday evening to help kick off the Adair County Fair at the family fun games festivities.

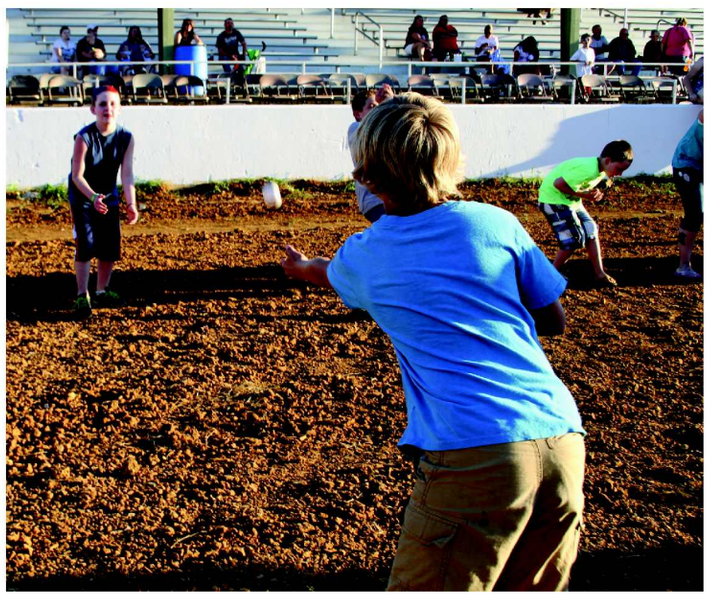

Needles aren't safe, so the needle-in-a-haystack event Friday at the Adair County Fair's family fun games featured buttons instead, and youngsters were able to exchange the buttons they found for crisp $1 bills.

Isaac Moore, 17, took second place in the tire toss event Friday at the Adair County Fair's family fun games. Moore's toss went more than 26 feet.

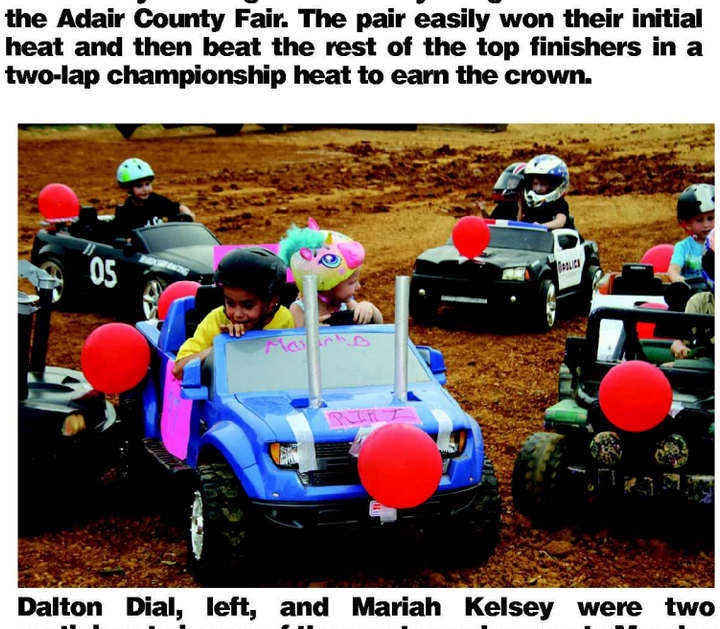

Alan Consavage, left, of Burkesville, and Josiah Peterson, of Columbia, dominated the three-legged race Friday evening at the family fun games to kick of the Adair County Fair. The pair easily won their initial heat and then beat the rest of the top finishers in a two-lap championship heat to earn the crown.

Dalton Curtis, front, and his partner, Gavin Burress, made it farther than any other non-adult contestants in the egg toss event Friday evening at the Adair County Fair's family fun games.

Four-year-old Trinity Rooks didn't care to be rushed in Friday's youngest division of the always-popular watermelon eating contest at the Adair County Fair's family fun games.

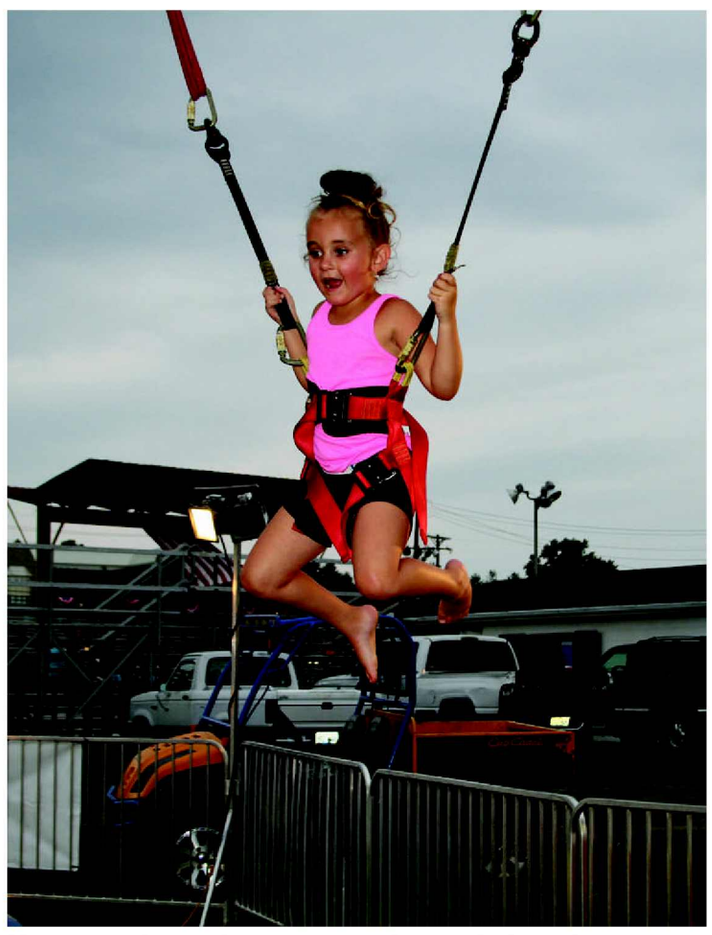

Dalton Dial, left, and Mariah Kelsey were two participants in one of the most popular events Monday night at the Adair County Fair—the Power Wheels Derby.

Jace Miller, left, and Jake Bryant tried their luck on the ring toss game Monday night at the Adair County Fair. Jace is the son of Shannon Greer and Mo Miller, and Jake's parents are Lyndsay and Jason Bryant.

Eli Iqbal, left, and Ellie Staten were two of the youngest attendees to enjoy the carnival rides Monday for the carnival's opening night at the Adair County Fair.

Harnessed to bungee cords and jumping on a trampoline, 4-year-old Keylin Bergin made the most of her trip to the Adair County Fair Monday night. Keylin's parents are James and Nicole Bergin, from Columbia.

SPORTS Sports

THE BREAKDOWN with Blake Spires

I am most definitely not old enough to talk about how things were "back in my day." I'm not really even to 'my day' yet, as far as I know, but I'm several years from being able to look back and lament the current state of the world while romanticizing the way things used to be. Sports, however, are a different matter.

I don't mean the quality of the sports as a whole. I enjoy the same sports that I did when I was younger, plus a few like soccer and MMA that I've picked up along the way, and I actually feel like I enjoy them more than I did when I was a kid. I understand them better, I have my own TV that allows me to watch whichever game I want whenever I want to watch it, and the growth of the Internet has made both watching games and partaking in the commentary surrounding them much easier and more interactive.

Sadly, however, some sports-related events aren't as enjoyable as they used to be. Oftentimes, they're the things I loved the most as a kid, the things I really looked forward to, the things I set aside time or made mental notes to make sure my kid schedule was clear of outdoor karate and trying to climb things you're not supposed to climb for. I'm not sure if I'm simply less easily amused now, if the players participating don't capture my attention the way they did before, or if the events are actually somehow getting worse, but they have gone from some of my favorite events to something I'll really only watch if I have nothing else to do.

First of all, every sport's All-Star game now finds itself on this list. As a 10-year-old, you'd find me squarely in front of the TV as the NBA, MLB and NFL versions of these glorified exhibitions took place. I cared who was named to the teams, who would get to start, and even who would win (I was a Western Conference, American League, AFC guy). Now, I'm aware of who makes each team because it's involved in the discussion about the sports and I read or watch something about them almost daily, and I might tune in for a few minutes if I happen to notice them while watching TV, but they're mostly relegated to a few Sportscenter highlights on my scale of awareness.

On a related note, the All-Star game competitions are even higher on the list. Oddly enough, I used to look forward to these more than the games themselves. The Home Run Derby was the coolest sporting event that happened all summer and the NBA Dunk Contest was the main event of All-Star Weekend. As I said, I'm not sure if it's because the contests replaced Vince Carter and Ken Griffey, Jr. with Gerald Green and Nick Swisher, or if I'm just not interested in two-plus hours of repetition and empty time anymore. Regardless, they've both lost their luster in a major way.

The third and final (for the sake of this column, anyway) thing on my list is the And-1 Mixtape. For those of you who are either unfamiliar or have forgotten, And-1 was (is?) a clothing brand that started out producing basketball mixtapes, which eventually garnered so much popularity that they became a full TV series complete with a reality show-like competition to see who could join their tour.

These mixtapes were essentially breakdancing competitions with a basketball, and the end result was always a defender falling down, leading to a completely uncontested alley-oop to which the entire crowd reacted as if they were on fire while watching The Beatles arrive in America. I'm man enough to admit that every freelance moment of basketball in the lives of my friends and myself consisted of trying to emulate these moves to the best of our limited abilities. If a coach wasn't making us do something structured (or even oftentimes when he was), we were throwing basketballs off of one another's face or putting the ball inside our tiny shirts and trying to spin it around our body for no net gain or advantage.

Nowadays, I'm occasionally somehow exposed to random online clips of these mixtapes or one of their many off-shoot productions, and while my amusement and enjoyment is still there, it's for how incredibly ridiculous the entire spectacle is, not the value of the basketball itself.

I understand that we all outgrow things that we once enjoyed. That's life, and it's part of growing up. It just strikes me as odd how these things happen with sports, because our interest in those often increases as we age—it's only the peripheral acts of them that diminish. My two nephews are fascinated by who wins the dunk contest or which guy has the best crossover, so I know it's definitely an interest still alive among the pre-adult community, which further solidifies my belief that it's age-related.

That's sad to me. I know how much enjoyment I used to get from these sideshow acts, and I know how many great hours my friends and I spent watching, arguing about, and trying to copy the feats we saw on whatever field of play was in season. I'm glad to see it carrying on with the current generation of kids, and I hope they too can look back someday and appreciate the fun they had long after their interest in such a spectacle goes the way of Hot Sauce and The Professor.

Former Lindsey Wilson Blue Raider Osnowitz Inks Professional Contract

Former Lindsey Wilson baseball standout Mitchell Osnowitz has signed a free agent contract with the Gulf Coast League Braves, a minor-league affiliate of the Atlanta Braves based in Orlando, Fla.

The 6-foot-5 Bloomington, Ill., native joins the Braves in rookie ball of the 16-team Gulf Coast League. The Braves compete in the Northeast Division of the GCL along with affiliates of the Houston Astros, Detroit Tigers and New York Yankees.

In two seasons at Lindsey Wilson, Osnowitz appeared in 118 games recording 133 hits including 18 home runs and 77 runs batted in. He tallied 219 total bases while holding a .344 batting average.

During his senior season, Osnowitz led the team in batting average (.375), hits (72), doubles (13), home runs (13) and RBIs (45). His 13 home runs were the seventh most in the NAIA in 2014. Osnowitz also holds a 2-0 pitching record in seven appearances for the Blue Raiders.

Twice Osnowitz earned All Mid-South Conference honors and Academic All-MSC honors. He became the first Blue Raider since 2000 to be named an NAIA All-American team member, picking up Second Team honors his senior season. Osnowitz also earned NAIA Scholar-Athlete honors and was named to the Capital One Academic All-America College Division Baseball First Team.

"Mitchell has worked very hard to demonstrate great work ethic and patience and we're very excited that he is getting his chance in a great organization," said Lindsey Wilson head baseball coach Jonathan Burton. "He will be a great fit and leader in the clubhouse and I have no doubt he will represent our program in a professional manner."

Time For Pickles

There is nothing that sets off a cold cut sandwich better than the taste of a pickle, and with so many varieties, you are bound to find one to suit every palate. So it probably won't surprise you that pickles are a popular home food preservation item.

To ensure safe, tasty home-canned pickles, always follow research-based recipes, such as those offered by Extension, that have been tested for product safety. Follow the recipe and use the proper amounts of the appropriate ingredients to yield the best flavor from your food and to prevent food-borne illness.

Quick-process pickles usually consist of cucumbers or other vegetables, vinegar, spices and seasonings. Always use fresh, firm vegetables for pickling. Discard a one-sixteenth slice from the blossom end of the vegetable to help keep the final product firm. Blossoms contain enzymes that can cause vegetables to soften. Soaking the cucumbers or other vegetables in salt water for several hours before covering with the pickling liquid will allow for easier packing.

When making pickles, use only commercial vinegar that has at least 5 percent acidity. Do not dilute the vinegar unless specified in the recipe, because the acidity is needed for a safe product. The addition of vinegar makes pickles a high-acid food, which allows them to be safely processed using a boiling-water canner. Use canning or pickling salt. Table salt may make the pickling mixture cloudy. Use white sugar unless the recipe calls for brown.

Quick-process pickles are more flavorful if allowed to sit for several weeks after processing. This allows the vegetables to aromatically blend with the seasonings and spices.

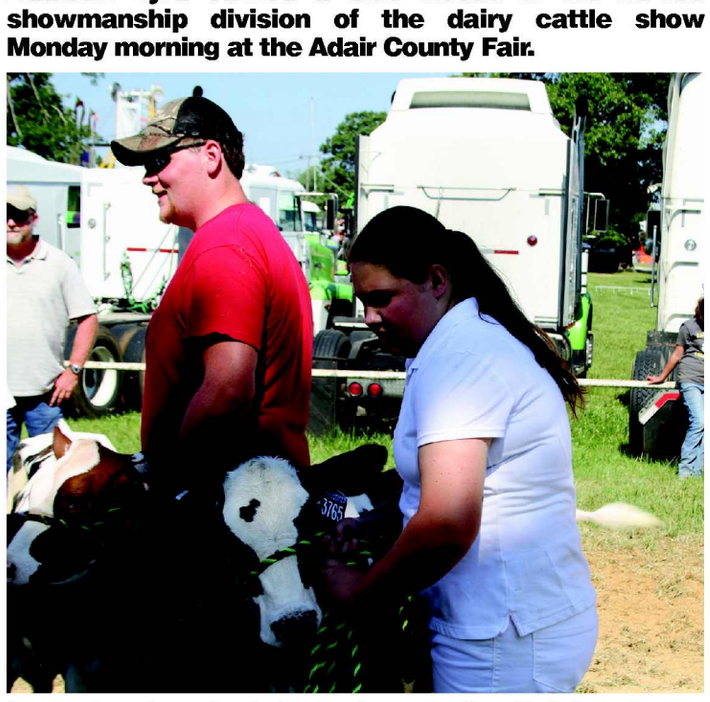

If you are new to home canning, a good place to start is with the Extension publication FCS3-578 "Home Canning Basics." More information on pickling and recipes for beginning, intermediate and advanced canners and for individuals with dietary restrictions are available in publication FCS3-582 "Home Canning Pickled and Fermented Foods." Both publications are available online at and or through the Adair County Cooperative Extension Service.
